David and Jenny: Learning about Mitochondrial Disease

By Terry Simon

David and Jenny are great friends—despite their differences. They learn how to adjust how they do things so they can play together, because their friendship is worth it. Have fun reading to your child and teaching them about diversity in an interesting way.

Terry Simon was born and raised in Glen Allen, Virginia. Growing up, she spent time at school with children who had special needs. After getting married and moving to California, she worked at a therapy office for children.

Terry has always loved reading and writing; she started writing her own stories and poems at a young age. She hopes that by writing these books, children can be taught that it's okay to be different and that showing kindness can be easy. She currently resides in Texas, with her husband, two daughters, and Great Dane. She looks forward to writing more Ribbon Series books and spreading awareness every day.
